

Artist of Tomorrow Awardees 2011

Adaria Coulter – Visual Art

“When I go out into the world, I hope to ignite in someone else the same creative passion that burns inside of me. Art gave me the chance to be myself, to share my soul with the world. I hope to make it easier for young artists to thrive and grow by giving them the resources they need to be successful – I’m going to give back to the community that helped me grow.”

Karina McCorkle – Literature

“Being a writer is the only career for me because finishing a story or poem is the only time when I feel completely fulfilled. As a writer, I want to show people that language is beautiful, stories are infinite, and words can never be put together quite the same way twice.”

Alex Tobey – Theatre/Musical Theatre

“I hope to explore non-traditional, modern theatrical methods to push the boundaries of theatrical storytelling and possibly create my own unique method of using theatre to tell stories and analyze universal themes in today’s society. Hopefully, I can continue on this path at UNC School of the Arts to change from an Artist of Tomorrow into an ‘Artist of Today.’”

Myles Travitz – Music

“I believe the arts have a tremendous impact on the community in which we live. My dream is to graduate from Berklee College of Music with a degree in music performance and composition. I hope to perform my songs for audiences around the world and share my love of music.”

Katy Wilson – Music

“My goal is to express the importance of music in education. Life changing experiences, such as my own with opera, need to be more accessible to youth. My dream would be to help bring opera to campuses all over the United States. Classical music will continue to move not only myself but also the world, if given the opportunity to be heard.”
