

TRINITY ROAD PEDESTRIAN TUNNEL FEASIBILITY STUDY

Newsletter #1, April 2012

INTRODUCTION

The North Carolina Department of Transportation (NCDOT) is studying the feasibility of a pedestrian tunnel under Trinity Road near North Carolina State University's Carter-Finley Stadium and the North Carolina State Fairgrounds. The purpose of this newsletter is to invite you to the first public workshop to learn more about the project and talk with the project team.

NCDOT is preparing a feasibility study to determine whether the project should be programmed for further design and planning. No other phases of the project have been funded or scheduled at this time.

The project would provide a way to separate vehicular traffic and pedestrians during football games, the State Fair, and events at PNC Arena. Conceptual designs and drawings will be presented at the workshop. NCDOT and consultant team staff will be available to discuss the project and answer questions.

An estimated 4,000 people crossed Trinity Road in the 30-minute period following the UNC-CH / NC State football game on November 5, 2011.

Total attendance at the 2011 NC State Fair was estimated at more than one million people.

During the busiest 15-minute period, over 1,770 people crossed Trinity Road.
